The crystal structure predominantly depends on the polymeric precursor system used, the processing parameters of the fiber formation technique, as well as the thermal conversion processes. Meanwhile, the formation of voids and their properties depend on the precursor system, the fiber formation process, and the heat treatment.

On the morphology and structure formation of carbon fibers

This paper reviews the processing, properties, and structure of carbon fibers. Carbon fibers are derived from several precursors, with polyacrylonitrile being the predominant precursor used today. Carbon fibers have high strength (3–7 GPa), high modulus (200–500 GPa), compressive strength (1–3 GPa), shear modulus (10–15 GPa), and low density (1.75–2.00 g/cm<sup>3</sup>).

The processing, properties, and structure of carbon fibers

Carbon Fibers presents an up-to-date review of the progress pertaining to the formation of carbon fibers from rayon, acrylic, and pitch precursors. The book emphasizes the preparation, characterization, and properties of commercial materials.
